Your Teaming Guide

Teaming with other firms lets you chase bigger government contracts or build past performance faster.

What it is. Teaming means two or more companies work together on a bid. You might be the prime, bringing in a sub for specific skills or past performance. Or you might be a sub, getting a piece of a larger contract and earning past performance credit you couldn't get alone.

When to use it. Use this when a contract is too big for you to bid alone, or when you need a specific capability or past performance from another firm. If you're SDVOSB-verified, teaming with a large prime can get you into bigger agencies like VA. We usually consider teaming for opportunities over $5 million, especially if it's a new agency or a service outside our core.

How to use it.

- First, open the 'Mutual NDA (Word)' file. Get this signed before you share any sensitive pricing or technical details.
- Next, use the 'Teaming Agreement (Word)' template. This lays out who does what, workshare percentages, and what happens if you win or lose.
- Work through the workshare. Who's doing 51%? Who's responsible for which tasks?
- Discuss exclusivity. Will you only bid this opportunity together, or can they bid with others?

Watch out for. Don't skip the NDA. Sharing your pricing without one is a fast way to lose your competitive edge.
