

RFQ Quoting: Your First Wins

This guide helps you quickly quote on smaller federal buys, which are often the easiest way for new firms to get their first contract.

What it is. RFQs, or Requests for Quote, are how federal agencies buy goods and services quickly. They're for micro-purchases and Simplified Acquisition buys, usually under $250,000. These aren't full proposals; they're fast, price-focused bids.

When to use it. You'll see RFQs when an agency needs something fast, often for smaller dollar amounts. For many small firms, especially if you're SDVOSB-verified, these are your best shot at early wins and building past performance.

How to use it.

- Open the "RFQ Playbook" file in this folder.
- Read through it to understand the process for these quick-turn opportunities.
- Focus on providing a clear price and showing you can deliver fast.
- Submit a clean, responsive quote. Don't overthink it.

Watch out for. Don't treat an RFQ like a full proposal. Agencies want a quick, clear price and confirmation you can do the job. A polished, lengthy document will often lose to a simple, fast, and well-priced quote.

Open it in your kit: <https://app.capturepilot.com/kit/rfq> Next step: <https://app.capturepilot.com/kit/idiq> (IDIQ / GWAC Task Orders)