

After You Win: Staying Compliant

Your first federal contract is your audition for the next one, so doing it right sets you up for future wins.

What it is. This section covers what you need to do after you win a contract. It's about delivering on your promises, keeping your books clean, and documenting everything. Good compliance ensures you get a strong CPARS rating, which is critical for future bids.

When to use it. Start looking at this right after you get your contract award. You'll use these tools and guides throughout the contract's life. For example, you'll need a subcontracting plan if your contract requires it, and you'll use the mod request form anytime the scope changes.

How to use it.

- First, read the 'CPARS & Past-Performance Guide.' Your CPARS rating is how future buyers judge you, so understand how it works.
- If you're doing cost-reimbursable work, check out 'DCAA Accounting Basics' to keep your books audit-ready.
- Use the 'Quality Assurance Plan (Word)' template to build your own plan for delivering good work.
- If your contract has a subcontracting requirement, use the 'Subcontracting Plan (Word)' template to draft yours.
- Anytime you need to change the contract, use the 'Contract Mod Request (Word)' template to get it in writing.

Watch out for. The biggest mistake is not documenting your performance. Your CPARS rating is based on what you deliver and what you can prove you delivered. Don't leave it to chance.

Open it in your kit: <https://app.capturepilot.com/kit/post-award> Next step: <https://app.capturepilot.com/kit/founder-call> (Founder Onboarding Call)